U. S. Shipping Board Recruiting Service

A traveling man who saw a poster in H. F. Pitts' drug store, on which were the words "Enroll here for the Merchant Marine," registered this thought with the proprietor, who is a special enrolling agent of the U. S. Shipping Board: "Leave Uncle Sam alone for pulling the right dope in the recruiting line. A young man who wants into the Merchant Marine can't go wrong when he steers for a drug store. The druggist shows a red and green light—port and starboard, see? Just like a ship. The coming sailor can get his first lesson in seagoing right here in Jasper by remembering that the green light is carried on the right hand side—starboard—and the red light on the left hand side of a ship—port. He can also remember that one of the first rules of the road at sea is 'green to green, red to red,' when vessels meet at night.
